Prosecutor in need of defence after pub brawl

Assault charge.
Crown attorney stands accused of sending two colleagues to hospital

Toronto police have charged a Crown attorney with assault after a late-night pub fight involving three prosecutors ended with two being sent to hospital.

Constantinos Stratos, who works out of the city's Scarborough courthouse, was charged on Sunday with assault causing bodily harm after an incident at the Old Stone Cottage Pub on Kingston Road, according to police.

Police would not say whom Stratos is charged with assaulting. The Ministry of the Attorney General offered little information, but legal and police sources with knowledge of the incident said that Stratos was at the pub with colleagues and fellow Crown attorneys James Dunda and Lisa Will when a fight between him and Dunda erupted.

Will was accidentally hit in the face and had a tooth knocked out, said one source. Dunda suffered facial injuries, another source said. Torstar News Service has not been able to independently verify those claims.

Messages left with all three lawyers at their Scarborough offices and homes were not returned Thursday. A clerk who answered the phone at the Scarborough Crown's office would only say Stratos was "on leave."

Ministry spokesman Brendan Crawley said he would not be able to provide any further details as the matter has yet to appear in court. (Toronto police confirmed Stratos was released on a "promise to appear" with conditions.)

When asked about Stratos' employment status, Crawley said the ministry "does not comment on human-resources matters."

Sunday's fight, which took place around 11:30 p.m., rattled employees at the Old Stone Cottage Pub — a cosy family run bar and restaurant that caters to residents who live in Guildwood Village.

Sunday night, in particular, is quiet, attracting family diners. Staff were not familiar with the trio of nicely dressed people eating in the dining room.

"We know our clientele really well. They were unfamiliar to us," said manager Brian Short, who was working that night at the family's other location in Pickering but had been briefed by staff who were there and viewed security footage.

The group — two men and a woman — was not "overserved" and attracted no attention as they sat casually.

Toronto police have asked for a copy of the security camera footage from that night, which shows a small portion of the incident, Chris Short said.

It is unclear when Stratos will appear next in court. Toronto police did not respond to a Thursday request for the date of his first court appearance. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

A 2007 Law Times story about a boxing fundraiser that pitted lawyers against one another features Constantino "Kosta" Stratos as one of the fighters.

- Stratos "squared off against Ben 'The Boss' Moss," the article says, adding Stratos "scored a TKO in the second round, leaving The Boss a bit shaken."

‘We deserve the lion’s share’

Building Canada.
Ford wants Toronto to ‘be the focus’ of $14B federal infrastructure commitment, but try telling that to Harper

Prime Minister Stephen Harper speaks to media and guests about infrastructure funding at the Whitchurch-Stouffville Museum and Community Centre on Thursday. GALIT RODAN/THE CANADIAN PRESS

While Stephen Harper focused on small communities, Mayor Rob Ford said Toronto should be the focus of the New Building Canada Fund.

As the jostling begins over a $14-billion federal infrastructure fund, Ford is making clear which city should get the biggest piece of the pie.

“I think we deserve the lion’s share,” Ford told reporters at city hall on Thursday. “Toronto must be the focus of this commitment. When Toronto succeeds, the region succeeds, Canada succeeds.”

Ford’s comments sharply contrasted the message Prime Minister Stephen Harper conveyed a few hours earlier, as he rolled out the framework of the much-anticipated New Building Canada Fund.

Although the 10-year fund is expected to be the source for the $660 million Ottawa has promised for the Scarborough subway, Harper focused instead on the lift he said the Building Canada plan would provide to not-so-urban centres.

For the announcement, Harper chose the quaint Whitchurch-Stouffville Museum and Community Centre on the northern outskirts of Toronto, where he touted the government’s efforts to ensure that the money is fairly dispersed.

“During consultations, our government heard repeatedly that smaller towns such as Stouffville need the same, predictable access to federal funds that large urban centres have,” Harper said. “Our government listened.”

Harper drew applause from the crowd when he said $1 billion would be set aside exclusively for communities with less than 100,000 people.

Small communities still remain eligible to apply for the remainder of the funds, he said.

Municipal leaders have been anxiously awaiting the details of the $14-billion fund, which was renewed in last year’s budget.

The framework released on Thursday does not offer insight into the application process, but provides some of the broad strokes of the plan.

The plan earmarks $4 billion for projects that are deemed to be of national significance, such as highways, public transit and airports, and will be “determined by project merit, guided by federal priorities,” according to a press release from the Prime Minister’s Office.

The remaining $10 billion will go to national and regional projects, such as drinking water and Internet connectivity, with each province and territory receiving a base amount of $250 million plus a per-capita allocation over the life of the program. The $1 billion reserved for small communities will be drawn from that part of the fund. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Embattled TCHC chief sent back to school

Gene Jones TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Toronto Community Housing Corp. chief executive Gene Jones has been denied his annual bonus, assigned a management coach, and forced to sign up for a university’s “executive leadership program” after an investigation found he violated the public landlord’s policies and “failed to exercise proper management oversight.”

TCHC chair Bud Purves announced the board’s unusual sanctions against Jones on Thursday.

Purves, however, would not say what Jones was found to have done, and Jones himself was absent without explanation from the board meeting where his fate was debated behind closed doors.

The board’s acknowledgment of wrongdoing by Jones is the latest embarrassment for the long-troubled government company he was hired to turn around — and Mayor Rob Ford claims he already has. The discipline announced Thursday may not be the end of Jones’s woes: The city ombudsman is conducting a separate investigation into his hiring and promotion practices, and her report is expected within months.

Numerous TCHC employees have complained to city officials about Jones’ personnel methods since he began a broad management shake-up upon his arrival in mid-2012.

TTC UNVEILS 2014 CUSTOMER CHARTER

ANDY BYFORD
CEO
TORONTO TRANSIT COMMISSION

Today, the TTC launched its second annual Customer Charter.

Having a charter sends a powerful message that we are serious about improving our performance and that our efforts and time are focused on issues of importance to customers.

This year, we are committed to delivery of 39, time-bound, specific promises to improve service across the full range of our operation. This builds on the success of last year's inaugural charter in which 31 promises were delivered.

Development of this year's charter involved consultation with our Advisory Committee for Accessible Transit and the Customer Liaison Panel so that we could be sure to focus on the right areas.

In addition to general, ongoing commitments to drive up punctuality, cleanliness and service reliability, this year's charter contains a specific promise to increase the reliability of our bus service via the introduction of on-route supervisors.

By the end of August, we will introduce for the first time ever, accessible streetcars into TTC service. They will debut on the 510 Spadina route. These streetcars will come equipped with Presto smart card readers, and we will also convert more subway stations to accept Presto.

And at Wheel-Trans, we will increase customer service staff at our call centre to reduce call wait times.

Every quarter, we will publish the results of our efforts on our website so that you can hold us to account for what we have promised to do.

It's all part of our journey to become a fully accountable, transparent and customer-focused organization.

EMPLOYEE PROFILE

With 22 years of experience working at new car dealerships, I was rather surprised when I was hired at the TTC and told that I would be trained in streetcars. Streetcars, I thought. I know nothing about streetcars. Now, I love streetcars. There is nothing like operating on rail!

LONG WEEKEND SUBWAY CLOSURE WARDEN TO KENNEDY STATIONS

This long weekend, from Saturday, Feb. 15, to Monday, Feb. 17, the Bloor-Danforth line will be closed from Warden to Kennedy stations for scheduled track construction. Frequent shuttle buses will operate between Warden and Kennedy stations with staff on-hand to offer assistance. Customers requiring an accessible connection must exit at Victoria Park or Kennedy stations, where a Wheel-Trans vehicle will be available. Regular subway service resumes on Tuesday, Feb. 18 at 6 a.m.

TTC 2014 CUSTOMER CHARTER

The TTC's 2014 Customer Charter has 39 distinct, time-based promises for its customers. For details on each, and timing, go to ttc.ca.

Our Promise

Your streetcar, bus or subway service will be reliable and on time – measured through our daily and monthly scorecards.

If there are problems with our service, we will be clear about what happened – and what we are doing to fix it.

When you call us, we'll answer. And 99 per cent of complaints filed with us will be addressed within five days, and reviewed and responded to within 15 business days.

We will make sure that the ramps and stop announcements on our vehicles are working properly.

We will do our best to communicate clearly with our customers in advance of any planned construction that affects service.

We will make sure you feel safe and secure while riding on our vehicles or while you are in our stations.

More Informative

We will work to improve signage at all TTC subway stations and in collector booths. We will examine the new stop pole design on the 94 Wellesley route and decide if it should be expanded system-wide. We will install another 60 digital custom information displays. As well, videos will be posted to keep you up-to-date on activities and operations at the TTC.

We Will Be Responsive

We will add 20 bus route supervisors on city streets to improve service reliability. We will issue all janitors with a modern professional uniform and commence roll-out of a new uniform to all operators and collectors. All of our collectors will accept debit or credit cards to buy a wider range of tickets, tokens and passes, and all Pass Vending Machines will accept credit cards. Monthly escalator inspections will be scheduled during off-peak hours. More TTC merchandise available for purchase. We will hire 20 more fare enforcement officers.

We will establish a special task force made up of the TTC Chair, the TTC CEO, the City Manager, the TTC CFAO and the City CFO to seek long-term capital and operating funding from senior levels of government, to ensure financial stability for the TTC. The task force will report quarterly on their progress throughout 2014.

Better Accessibility

There will be seven more people on staff to handle customer calls for Wheel-Trans service, reducing the number of missed calls to under 20 per cent. We will accommodate more Wheel-Trans trips, turning away less than one per cent. We will fully implement the support person's identification card program where no fare is charged for a support person travelling with a customer with disabilities. We will conduct a satisfaction survey to help us find ways to further improve our service.

Renewal

This year, more customers will be able to ride Line 1 (Yonge-University-Spadina), where we will be operating the new Toronto Rocket trains exclusively. We will have new streetcars on the 510 Spadina line, featuring PRESTO devices, accessible low floors, entry through all doors and air-conditioning. By year-end, we will have all-new articulated buses on seven routes: 7 Bathurst, 29 Dufferin, 36 Finch West, 63 Ossington, 6 Bay, 85 Sheppard East and 53 Steeles East.

More Modern – More Accessible

Presto will be installed in three new subway stations and all of our new streetcars. We will upgrade speakers in five subway stations – making public address announcements much easier to hear and understand. We will replace/repair wall tiles at four subway stations, stairs at four subway stations and floors at nine subway stations. We will begin the construction of the Wellesley Station second exit. We will open the new second platform at Union Station.

Commence construction of the Woodbine Station easier access project, as well as a second exit. Commence construction of the St Clair West Station easier access project. Near-complete construction of the Lawrence West Station easier access project. Near-complete construction of the Dufferin Station modernization project.

Attention will also be given to gum removal, graffiti, station signage, telephones, benches, trash containers, elevators and stairs. A further third of our stations will have had the floors reconditioned to a polished finish. All platform lighting with be washed and the bulbs replaced, including 70 per cent of all station mezzanines and entrances.

Additional photo ID sessions are taking place over the next several weeks – visit ttc.ca for details.

War of words over 'homosexism'

Tweet backlash. Trustee cites Urban Dictionary in rant against what he calls 'prejudice against straight men or women by LGBT'

JESSICA SMITH CROSS
jessica.smithcross@metronews.ca

A Toronto school trustee ignited a Twitter firestorm Thursday by ranting against "homosexism" and citing UrbanDictionary.com to bolster his argument.

Sam Sotiropoulos, a Toronto District School Board trustee, tweeted on Thursday morning that: "One of the most divisive influences in Canada today is #homosexism it's (sic) disseminators are maliciously rabid."

What he meant was unclear, at first. "Homosexism" can't be found in any mainstream dictionaries, but is generally used in academic work to mean prejudice against homosexuals.

Sotiropoulos later tweeted that it means "prejudice against straight men or women by LGBT," and cited an entry in Urban Dictionary for the definition.

City Coun. Shelley Carroll weighed in, calling his comments dumb, and he replied by calling her a windbag and suggesting she was smoking something.

He told Metro that the problem began earlier this week, when he repeatedly tweeted Coun. Kristyn Wong-Tam to ask her whether there were naked men at the Pride Parade and whether that was illegal, and received angry messages from other Twitter users.

"I have been slandered, I have been called every name in the book, on Twitter by all sorts of folk who would like to classify themselves as inclusive," he said. "Calling me a homophobe, for one, is a slander."

Sotiropoulos said he supports gay rights and the pride parade, but not public nudity, and he is against all discrimination. He said he understands that LGBT people face violence, but "discrimination is discrimination, there's no gradations of discrimination."

Toronto Coun. Shelley Carroll called Sam Sotiropoulos's comments "dumb."
DAVID COOPER/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

He said homosexism is "a divisive issue and one at the very forefront of social conversation."

Asked about concern over a school trustee using Urban Dictionary as a source, he asked, "What is a reputable source on the Internet, Wikipedia? That's the same thing."

Carroll told Metro Sotiropoulos's tweets were "quite shocking," but said she believes they were sparked by the mayor's recent comments opposing the rainbow flag at city hall.

"It's unleashed something that's enabled people and it's unfortunate that one of those people is a school trustee, given their role in building a fair and inclusive society," she said.

Carroll noted that Sotiropoulos was elected in a byelection with low voter turnout and said it's hard to get the public to pay attention to school trustees since their role was diminished in the Mike Harris era.

"Even after all is said and done in the flurry on Twitter, people won't even be aware that: A) this man is their trustee, and B) that he said these things," she said.

I object!

"I have been slandered, I have been called every name in the book, on Twitter by all sorts of folk who would like to classify themselves as inclusive."
Sam Sotiropoulos, TDSB trustee

Police, property attacked

Jail time for 2 U.S. G20 protesters

The American G20 protester who faced the largest number of charges stemming from the Toronto police investigation into the June 2010 events has been sentenced to two years in prison for his "rampage" through the downtown core.

Of 50 people charged in attacks on police and property that caused about $750,000 in damage, Kevin Chianella, 21, received the only penitentiary sentence, said Det. Sgt. Gary Giroux, lead detective in the G20 investigation.

Ontario Court Justice Ronald Boivin also sentenced another American, Joel Bitar, to 20 months in jail. Boivin did not order either to pay restitution because of their financial circumstances.

The sentencings "virtually mark the end of the G20 litigation," said Giroux; only one American protester remains before the courts.

Police warn of romance scams

With Valentine's Day top of mind for many, the Toronto police financial crimes unit is warning people to be wary of the elaborate scams that can accompany the most romantic day of the year.

"Every year, Canadians fall victim to romance scams," said Const. Sarah Diamond.

Romance scams generally start through social networking or dating websites and involve fraudsters who attempt to trick potential victims into sharing personal information — such as their full name, phone number and bank details — by professing their love at an unusually rapid pace.

According to police, requests that money be sent via cash transfer companies or mailed cheques instead of banks are common in these scams. In rare cases, fraudsters may ask to live with their victim or attempt to isolate them from friends and family.

"Romance scams cause both emotional and financial trauma to victims. Often, the financial loss is easily dealt with but the emotional trauma is lasting," said Diamond.

Students show off their art work for sale at the second annual Grade 8 Entrepreneurial Market

Teens turn stuffies for

Kidpreneurs. Grade 8 sockbuddies learn how to create, promote and sell a product, Dragons' Den style

They came up with a business plan, made their pitch — in Dragons' Den style before a panel of tough questioners — and when they got their product to market, broke even in their first hour.

Not bad for a group of Toronto teen entrepreneurs, who as part of a Grade 8 assignment had to create, promote and sell a product or service — and try to make a profit.

"In the first hour, we made $100, which is insane," said Farhan Haque, 14, one of five Earl Grey Senior Public School students behind #sockbuddies, handmade stuffed animals priced up to $10.

By the end of Thursday's midday market held in the gym at their Riverdale school — visited by kids from nearby schools, as well as parents and community members — they'd sold $300 worth, with $200 of that being pure profit, which the group will split.

It's money well earned. "It took me two days to make one," said Neroli Harper, 13, adding that at one point the group got fed up with the stuffies because they were so time-consuming to create.

Some of the socks were bought new, others donated. But "we're not using dirty socks," clarified Cavanagh Matmor, 13, noting the reused socks were washed twice before being made into monkeys or bears.

posters, created a video commercial and decorated their booth with a knitted blanket from Neroli's grandmother as well as Christmas lights and a giant cardboard bear.

The assignment involved the school's nine Grade 8 classes, plus two Grade 7 special education classes.

Each student put up $20 to get their business started and purchase equipment and supplies, as well as a $2 business permit (proceeds of which will be donated to charity). Some sewed purses and phone cases, made Angry Bird clay key chains, or sold freshly made crepes.

The assignment, which covered several areas of the curriculum, was a big hit, said teacher Jodie Miller, who heard of the idea from a teacher friend.

The kids researched successful entrepreneurs, met with marketing professionals and devised a business plan, calculating how much it would cost to make a prototype and how much profit they could expect.

They then presented that to a panel of teachers. ("One was Kevin O'Leary," joked Miller, referring to the tough-talking panelist on the CBC show Dragons' Den.)

They marketed and promoted their wares ahead of time. On the day of the sale itself, "it was a total different skill set — they had to be salesmen," she said.

"It's so engaging for Grade 8s," Miller added. "Sometimes that age group is a tough crowd in terms of motivation. They worked with friends, put their own creative product out there — it was a huge success."

The money students paid for things like business permits is being donated to charity. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Soil contamination

Central Tech's sports field may stay closed

If the city decides to historically designate Central Technical high school, it could not only scrap a plan to enclose its playing field with a winterized dome but keep the tainted field closed.

The Toronto District School Board closed the field in November after routine soil testing for the project revealed contamination.

If the dome doesn't go ahead, the board won't have the money to clean up the contamination, a cost it would have shared with Razor Management, the company proposing the project.

"The field will remain closed. We don't have the money," said board chair Chris Bolton, adding it will cost at least $1 million. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

U.S. cable jingle thanks CBC for Sochi coverage

Cable subscribers in Toledo, Ohio, are singing the praises of Canada and CBC's television coverage, after a dispute with a local affiliate blocked broadcast of the Winter Olympics in Sochi.

In a 30-second commercial residents thank Canadians for coverage of the Olympics to the tune of Oh Canada. "CBC we'll tune our sets to thee," concludes the spot, which has been running regularly since the Games began Feb 6.

The dispute between Buckeye CableSystem and a network channel provider, which owns NBC's Toledo affiliate, means Buckeye is not carrying the programming. NBC has exclusive rights to cover the Olympics in the U.S. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Would you pay to be locked up?

They'll let you out ... eventually. Escape games force players to use wits to win their freedom

KATE WEBB
Metro in Vancouver

If you've ever wanted to pay to be locked in a room from which you must complete puzzles to escape, then this new Richmond, B.C., game facility is for you.

EXIT has four themed rooms: The Lost Ship, Ancient Egypt, Prison Escape and Laboratory Escape. Groups of anywhere from two to six people have 45 minutes to figure out how to get out by using critical thinking skills to solve challenges and riddles.

"It involves a lot of different skills to solve," said owner Justin Tang, who discovered the concept in his homeland of Hong Kong, where it is wildly popular.

"You need some basic math and you need teamwork, so it's not only thinking; it might be some action where you have to co-operate with a teammate."

The "real life escape room" business was inspired several years ago by "escape room" video games popularized in Japan, and has already taken off in the U.S., England, Switzerland, Japan, Taiwan, Malaysia, Thailand and Mainland China.

Swiss company Adventure Rooms has a similar facility in Kitchener, Ont.

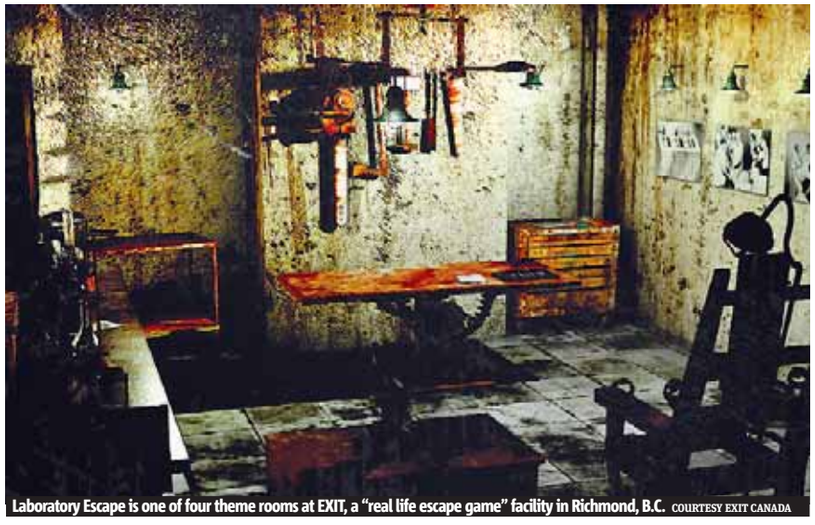
Tang said business is booming and he has already had about 7,000 players come through since he opened in October.

"I've been in Canada for over 16 years, and I really think that, especially in British Columbia, we need more entertainment," he said, chuckling.

"I explored around the world and I found this idea, and I think that Canadians definitely enjoy this kind of experience, and so far what I've heard from my customers is positive."

Tang added he has already had franchise inquiries from San Francisco, Montreal and Toronto.

He has booked players as young as nine, but because of the sophistication of the game, he said it is recommended for ages 16 and up. The cost per game is $22.99 per person plus GST.



Laboratory Escape is one of four theme rooms at EXIT, a "real life escape game" facility in Richmond, B.C. COURTESY EXIT CANADA

Facebook expands its gender identity choices

You don't have to be just male or female on Facebook anymore. The social media giant is adding a customizable option with about 50 different terms people can use to identify their gender as well as three preferred pronoun choices: him, her or them.

Facebook said the changes, set to launch on Thursday, initially cover the company's 159 million monthly users in the U.S. and are aimed at giving people more choices in how they describe themselves, such as androgynous, bi-gender, intersex, gender fluid or transgender.

"There's going to be a lot of people for whom this is going to mean nothing, but for the few it does impact, it means the world," said Facebook software engineer Brielle Harrison, who worked on the project and is herself undergoing gender transition, from male to female.

Facebook staffers said the expanded options were never questioned, from CEO Mark Zuckerberg on down.

"Really, there was no debate within Facebook about the social implications at all," said Alex Schultz, director of growth. "It was simple: Not allowing people to express something so fundamental is not really cool so we did something. Hopefully a more open and connected world will, by extension, make this a more understanding and tolerant world." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Canadian-style winter wallops U.S. East Coast

The latest storm to roll off nature's assembly line this bustling winter spread heavy snow and sleet along the U.S. Northeast corridor Thursday, while utility crews in the ice-encrusted South laboured to restore power to hundreds of thousands of shivering residents.

The sloppy weather shuttered schools and businesses, grounded more than 6,000 flights on Thursday alone and created more back-breaking work for people along the East Coast, where shovelling has become a weekly chore — sometimes a twice-weekly one.

"Snow has become a four-letter word," said Tom McGarrigle, chairman of the Delaware County Council, in suburban Philadelphia, where snow fell above the 15-cm mark for the fourth time this season, a first in the city's history.

Baltimore awoke to 38 centimetres of snow. Washington, D.C., had at least 20, shutting down federal offices and the city's two main airports. New York City took nearly 25 centimetres. Parts of New Jersey had over 28. The Boston area was expecting 10 to 15, while inland Connecticut and Massachusetts were looking at 30 or more.

In New Cumberland, Pa., Randal DeIvernois had to take a rest after shovelling his driveway. His snow blower had conked out.

"Every time it snows, it's like, 'oh, not again,'" he said. "I didn't get this much snow when I lived in Colorado. It's warmer at the Olympics than it is here. That's ridiculous."

Across the South, the storm left in its wake a world of ice-encrusted trees and driveways and snapped branches and power lines.

About 750,000 homes and businesses were left without power in Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Alabama, with scattered outages reported in the mid-Atlantic.

The procession of storms and cold blasts has cut into retail sales across the U.S., the Commerce Department reported Thursday. Sales dipped 0.4 per cent in January.

RCMP search for Whistler stuntman

A dramatic YouTube video that shows a couple hooting and hollering in a gondola at the Whistler ski resort before the man leaps off and unfurls a parachute nearly half a kilometre above the valley has turned the jumper into both an Internet hit and a wanted man.

In the video, which had been viewed more than 130,000 times Thursday, a young man dons a helmet cam and steps out of a cabin hanging from the Peak 2 Peak gondola, which connects Whistler and Blackcomb mountains.

Then he jumps, parachuting safely into the valley below.

Now, police have arrested a 23-year-old woman and are looking for the jumper, believed to be a 25-year-old Ontario man living in Vancouver.

RCMP Staff Sgt. Steve LeClair said police plan to recommend charges of mischief over $5,000 against the man. The woman was arrested on Wednesday and may face charges of obstruction of justice and mischief over $5,000. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Second zoo may kill giraffe

Death threats sent to Copenhagen Zoo, which last weekend killed a healthy giraffe named Marius and fed it to lions in front of a young audience, have not deterred another Danish zoo from the same course of action.

Jyllands Park Zoo is seeking a female giraffe that would replace one of its two males — a seven-year-old, also named Marius. The zoo claims the animal could not stay without threatening the breeding programme, and would be difficult to re-house.

"If we are told we have to euthanize (the giraffe) we would of course do that," Jyllands Park zookeeper Janni Løjtved Poulsen told Denmark's TV2, adding that she was "completely behind" Copenhagen Zoo's decision.

An online petition demanding Jyllands Park "transfer (Marius) to alternative accommodation and spare his life" reached 4,000 signatures in a matter of hours. A spokesman for animal welfare group PETA gave support for the campaign: "Zoos keep animals on display like living museum exhibits and dispose of them when they become inconvenient."

CSEC. Watchdog review clears spy agency's airport data experiment

A federal watchdog says Canada's electronic eavesdropping agency did not invade the online activities of Canadians during a controversial study of wireless communication at airports.

The independent body that monitors Communications Security Establishment Canada says the spy agency's effort wasn't about mass surveillance or the tracking of Canadians.

A CSEC document obtained by CBC — originally leaked by former U.S. spy contractor Edward Snowden — suggested information was taken from an unidentified Canadian airport's free Wi-Fi system over a two-week period.

In a new posting on its website, the CSEC watchdog says it has since questioned eavesdropping agency employees about the project.

It says the effort was used by CSEC to understand global communication networks and was not directed at Canadians or people in Canada.

on hockey in Sochi?

Olympics. Expert says the rest of Canada could learn something from Quebec, which does a good job of supporting all athletes — not just ones from the NHL

Canada's hockey obsession

"In terms of trying to support the other athletes ... it's not necessarily a good thing."

Dr. Janice Forsyth, on the attention paid to the men's Olympic hockey team.

DAVE LANGFORD
Metro in London

At noon EST Thursday, the Olympics in Sochi changed — and some people are suggesting not for the better.

That was when the Canadian men's hockey team took to the ice against Norway and began their 11-day pursuit of the Olympic gold medal.

So despite Patrick Chan beginning his chase for the elusive Canadian dream of winning the first men's singles figure-skating title, most Canadians were glued to TV sets in homes, offices and bars to watch Sidney Crosby, Drew Doughty and other NHLers.

Dr. Janice Forsyth, director of the International Centre for Olympic Studies at Western University, said the non-NHL athletes need more support, at least for the 17 days of the Sochi Games.

"This intensive focus that we have on hockey is understandable from a cultural point of view, but I think the media isn't doing our athletes in our sport system any favours by not giving the other athletes their due attention," Forsyth said.

Forsyth said even though the women's hockey coverage has improved, it has nowhere near the same interest as the men.

"In Canada, there is just that intensive focus that we have on hockey — and it's mostly around men's hockey, let's face it. It's really challenging when you don't see the other athletes getting as much attention," she said.

Forsyth said the focus on men's hockey is a "detriment to the other sports."

"It's because the NHL is taking a break and they're trying to generate excitement from the NHL crowd in the Olympic Games, just spinning the NHL model a different way, this time where the athletes actually represent their country," she said.

"In terms of trying to support the other athletes and generating support, it's not necessarily a good thing."

There is more balanced coverage of all athletes in Quebec, she said.

"We could actually learn a lesson from Quebec because they really do hold up their athletes as role models, and not just the hockey players," Forsyth said.

"They've got a really good funding base in the province, they've got good opportunities for sponsors — of course corporate sponsors step up the plate — and media is very supportive of all of the athletes."

ER. One in 10 patients waits more than 28 hours for a hospital bed, says report

A new report says one in 10 Canadians who goes to an emergency department and requires admission to hospital has to wait more than 28 hours for a bed.

The report says nine of 10 people who transfer into hospital from the emergency department do so in under 28 hours, and for them the median wait was 8.8 hours for a hospital bed.

The report is from the Canadian Institute for Health Information. Agnita Pal of the institute says the people who are waiting longer periods are typically older adults, who often have complex medical cases.

The lengthy wait some people experience is well beyond what is recommended by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians (CAEP).

The association issued a policy statement last fall calling for half of emergency department patients to be admitted within eight hours, and nine of 10 to be admitted within 12 hours.

Man sentenced to life in prison for killing ex-reporter

A fantasy game enthusiast was sentenced to life in prison Thursday for beating a former Pensacola newspaper reporter to death with a hammer and burying his body in a concrete-covered pit in Georgia.

William Cormier III was so desperate for money that he killed Sean Dugas in the fall of 2012 so he could steal his $100,000 collection of fantasy role-playing cards for the game Magic: The Gathering, prosecutors said.

Jurors convicted Cormier of first-degree murder after a little more than an hour of deliberations. Cormier showed no reaction as the verdict was read. Dugas' parents broke down in sobs as the verdict was read.

IOC presses Sochi organizers over jailed activist

The International Olympic Committee has asked Russian authorities to clarify why an activist who criticized the environmental impact of Olympic construction in Sochi has been sentenced to three years in prison.

Yevgeny Vitishko was sentenced Wednesday for spray-painting a fence of a property in a forest where construction is banned, according to his lawyer.

Human Rights Watch urged the IOC to press Russian authorities to free him.

IOC spokesman Mark Adams said Thursday, "We have asked Sochi for further clarification." However, Adams said Vitishko's sentence involved a "matter that was not in relation to the Olympic Games." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Lac-Mégantic victims aim to sue Ottawa

Quebec train disaster. Class-action lawsuit has expanded, claiming government was 'grossly negligent' in oversight

Victims of the Lac-Mégantic train disaster want to sue the federal government for allegedly failing to prevent a railway with the poorest safety record in North America from shipping highly explosive cargo through their town.

A runaway train carrying crude oil derailed last summer and exploded in the centre of the Quebec community, killing 47 people and destroying part of the downtown core.

The lead lawyer for an existing class-action suit has now expanded the long list of defendants to include the Attorney General of Canada, which delegates regulatory powers to the Canadian Transportation Agency and Transport Canada.

In the document, lead lawyer Daniel Larochelle alleges Transport Canada did not sufficiently sanction the Montreal, Maine & Atlantic Railway, even though the department was aware of the company's repeated violations, including train drivers allegedly failing to apply a sufficient number of brakes.

The motion alleges Transport Canada was "grossly negligent" in its oversight role related to the MMA.

The class-action was first registered in July and targets numerous defendants, including the MMA, its chairman Ed Burkhardt, train driver Tom Harding and companies allegedly responsible for the crude oil on board the train.

The amendment to the suit, presented Wednesday in a Quebec court, was added the same week Ottawa agreed to lift the ceiling on how much cash it will pay toward the decontamination and rebuilding of Lac-Mégantic, months of work expected to top $400 million.

1 #GoCanadaGo. There's no greater story than three hot sisters representing our country at the Olympics. The fact that two of them beat everyone else was just a welcome bonus. To the Dufour-Lapointe family of Quebec, I say "Bravo!" because they deserve it, and also because it's the same word in French and I don't want to offend Pauline Marois.

2 What a luger. After finishing 22nd in men's luge, American Tucker West became talk of the tweets when his dad told the world he was single and shy. Moments later he had prom invitations, marriage proposals, and I imagine, some freaky propositions. Like I always suspected: Ladies love luge. #TeamTucker

3 American Idol. Fresh off their flights, contestants were assembled at an airport hangar outside LAX where some were asked to re-audition. Judges divided the group into one bus headed for the hotel, and another directly back to the airport. They could have done it before departure, but apparently once you tell someone they're going to Hollywood, you actually have to take them to Hollywood.

4 Playing ball. Missouri college football star Michael Sam declared his homosexuality and lit up every media possible. Some of the NFL's execs and coaches issued an "anonymous" statement to Sports Illustrated saying that they expect Sam's draft position to drop, and added "I don't think football is ready for an openly gay player yet." It's true, the NFL is not ready to handle the fact that those are their best players.

5 Bieb-wacked. Blake Griffin is the star power forward for the L.A. Clippers: 24 years-old, an all-star, rich, talented and possessing an inspirational work ethic. A hero. So when a false rumour circulated that Griffin intervened during a Justin Bieber meltdown at a Starbucks in West Hollywood, and slapped the young singer, it spread across social media like wildfire. Why? Because so many of us wanted it to be true.

6 Polly-Wolly Doodle. The good ship lollipop sailed into the sunset this week when the world lost one of Hollywood's earliest movie megastars in Shirley Temple. Even more surprising was the outpouring of love from people of all ages who cited Temple as their inspiration. If there's a Twitter in heaven (and let's face it, there must be), then she would be very proud of her legacy. #RIP-Shirley

7 To my wifey. I'll just say this: Whatever anyone thinks of me, it would be much worse if I didn't have you. Happy Valentine's Day. If ever there were a time to let your significant other know how special he or she is, it's today. Gift, card, candy — as long as it comes from the heart. You can make an online proclamation of affection (or mention your special someone in a newspaper column) but beware that what you're really saying is, "I ain't spending no $100 on flowers!"

@Canucklehead_ca: Meh. @Barbie is no less plastic than most of the previous covers. Only thing possibly offensive is the blatant commercialism.

@mtlkeith: Its a freakin doll.:((

@theReal_KPHILL: @Barbie @mattel is getting desperate creating controversy, Barbie can't compete to today's youth influences.

Stem Cell Activator

#63

NPN 80035385.

Helps to activate naturally millions of stem cells from our own bone marrow. The increase in stem cells released from the bone marrow into the blood stream have the potential to become other types of tissue cells with specialized function. Stem cells will multiply and are able to become heart cells, liver cells or any other organ. Located everywhere in our body, stem cells are even under our skin layered between the epidermis and dermis. This is why an increase in stem cells under our skin may help to create a more youthful cell that would replenish elastin and collagen and thus may make us look younger. If our bone marrow does not produce enough stem cells this can result in many illnesses, especially a weak heart, kidneys, liver, pancreas, in fact all healthy functions of our body are decreased. Sufficient stem cells in our body have a great potential of self-repair and the ability to rejuvenate tissues. ■ Women looking for anti-aging help! We all want to slow down aging. After using a bottle of Bell Stem Cell Activator #63 my skin seemed smoother and brighter. My hair looked healthier. It seems to have a cleansing effect. I'm delighted. Leona McCormick, 50, Clgary, AB ■ All around healing effect! The first thing I noticed after starting Bell Stem Cell Activator #63 was that my skin feels firmer and stronger. My friends commented that my skin looks more vibrant. My doctor at my yearly physical told me that my blood pressure is significantly lower. Many good things are happening. Joy Davison, 55, Calgary, AB ■ Best natural medicine I ever took! First day of using the Bell Stem Cell Activator my energy levels were way up. No more afternoon slump. A friend stopped me asking me what I was using on my skin. My pain in my hip is gone. My pants got looser. Christine Blythe, 54, Hamilton, ON

Synopsis

Just in time for Valentine's Day comes Winter's Tale, the romantic time travel tale of Peter Lake (Colin Farrell), a turn-of-the-last century burglar who comes across the love of his life while robbing a mansion he thought was empty. Beverly Penn (Downton Abbey's Jessica Brown Findlay), the beautiful-but-doomed daughter of a wealthy newspaper tycoon, is a precocious and philosophical young woman with just months to live. He wants to save her, but first he must save himself from evil crime lord Pearly Soames (Russell Crowe), a brutal man who wants Lake dead. Then, in a twist suggested by the Brothers Grimm, he finds himself thrust 100 years into the future with only the faded memory of Beverly and a white guardian angel horse as company.

Lovers in a mystical time

Winter's Tale. The Reel Guys aren't buying this Colin-Farrell-fronted story of love, time travel and a flying horse

Reel Guys

RICHARD CROUSE AND MARK BRESLIN

Richard: Mark, I am not a cold-hearted man. I like love stories as much as anyone and, as a fan of Say Anything, almost well up whenever I hear Peter Gabriel's In Your Eyes. But the sledgehammer romance of Winter's Tale left me feeling bruised rather than buoyed. The mix of metaphysical romance, magic realism and demonic revenge is a strange stew that worked well in the book by Mark Helprin but seems to have lost something in the translation to the screen. I feel the sight of Colin Farrell flying above New York on a winged Pegasus is best left in the mind's eye.

Mark: Richard, sometime in the '80s, I was dating a girl who gave me a copy of the book, which she said was the "greatest novel of all time." I read about a third of it, tossed it on the floor, and subsequently broke up with her. So obviously the story, with its magic/tragic, hocus/pocus view of romance isn't for me. This is not a poorly made movie. It's lovely to look at, has some fine acting, and has a lot of good dialogue mixed in with the bad. But Richard, there's a magic horse in it. That horse will separate those who will be enthralled by the film from those who think it's embarrassing hooey. Guess which group I fall into?

RC: I'm with you on the Pegasus and it's a credit to the charm of Colin Farrell and Findlay that the romantic side of the tale comes alive at all. The first meeting between Peter and Beverly, over a cup of tea, is simple, effective and bristles with starry-eyed tension. More of that and less of the magic horse and I might have bought into the story. As it was I felt like I was strapped to a chair and force-fed all the Valentine's Day episodes of Touched by an Angel. What did you make of Russell Crowe? He seemed like he was having fun with his demonic gangster routine, but did it work for this movie?

MB: Yes, Crowe is one of the things in the movie that worked for me. It was the casting of his boss that was ridiculous, a preposterous cameo that threw off the already precarious balance of the film. When he came onscreen, there was no turning back from its silliness. But even if I accept the movie on its own ridiculous terms, it still has a major problem. It's like a two act play, but the two halves don't cleave together. The second act, which happens in present day New York, feels rushed and arbitrary. At least the first act takes some time building characters and mood. What did you think of the female lead, Jessica Brown Finlay?

RC: She's beautiful, a little frail and doesn't get buried by the schmaltz. I thought she was nicely cast.

MB: As was William Hurt. Always nice to see him working again.

Films to remind us life isn't all love and roses

MATT PRIGGE
Metro World News in New York

It's Valentine's Day, which doesn't mean you need to torture yourself with a film affirming the power of love. Instead, snuggle up with one that speaks to the other extreme: that love can die.

Gone With the Wind (1939)
Deplorable ode to the South rising again or the artistic pinnacle of the Hollywood studio system? It's both — and it's also one of the great anti-romances. Shot down by Ashley Wilkes (Leslie Howard), Scarlett O'Hara (Vivien Leigh) instead toys with the affections of dashing ladies' man Rhett Butler (Clark Gable). After 3 ¾ hours of being jerked around, he's finally had enough. His weary kiss-off — "Frankly, Scarlett, I don't give a damn" — has been replayed till it barely has any meaning, but it's truly one of the most badass eff-yous in the movies.

We Won't Grow Old Together (1972)
Best. Title. Ever. In Maurice Pialat's unforgiving, powerfully unsentimental drama, we see the last throes of the union between a miserable, fortysomething filmmaker (Jean Yanne) and his much younger girlfriend (Marlène Jobert, Eva Green's mom). Perhaps once he was alluring, but his career has stagnated and he's become an emotionally abusive cad who's gotten too used to having an understanding, weak-willed paramour." (His "pet name" for her appears to be "rat.") It's an insightful examination of mutual neediness.

Modern Romance (1981)
Albert Brooks is Woody Allen if Woody Allen didn't love himself. The "Albert Brooks" character (at least early on) is a self-absorbed monster who targets mates the way a cat does a mouse. His second directorial feature begins with Brooks' Hollywood editor breaking up with his girlfriend (Kathryn Harrold). He immediately regrets this, then spends half the movie trying to win her back. Once she relents, he instantly suspects her of infidelity. Though a comedy, and a very funny one, it's the darkest kind, one beloved by no less a warm-hearted soul than Stanley Kubrick.

Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind (2004)
Oh, if we could erase the bad memories of a failed relationship, as Jim Carrey's sad sack does in Charlie Kaufman and Michel Gondry's manic break-up fantasy. Crippled after his relationship with free-spirit alkie Kate Winslet ends horribly, he finds that his solution only makes him long for the good times being zapped from his brain along with the bad. As Woody Allen concluded in Annie Hall, we repeatedly put ourselves through the often atrocious and upsetting process of dating because "we need the eggs." If only we didn't.

Mystery/Horror

Here Comes The Devil

Director. Adrian García Bogliano

Stars. Francisco Barreiro, Laura Caro

Here Comes The Devil combines modern indie filmmaking and storytelling with a hint of '70s-styled psychological horror that may not just be psychological. Francisco Barreiro and Laura Caro play parents Felix and Sol whose preteen son and daughter inexplicably reappear after being lost overnight on a desolate, cave-riddled mountainside.

Make it a subterfuge Valentine's

The second season of House of Cards premieres Feb. 14 on Netflix. CONTRIBUTED

Writing comes first

"I love the fact that the new season is coming out on Valentine's Day ... I think their relationship is incredibly romantic."
Kevin Spacey

House of Cards is back. Kevin Spacey returns as a depraved soon-to-be VP

"Did you think I'd forgotten you?" asks Francis Underwood, addressing us viewers near the end of the second-season House of Cards debut. Then he roguishly adds, "Perhaps you hoped I had."

As if!

Portrayed by series star Kevin Spacey, Underwood, the soon-to-be-sworn-in vice-president, has a delicious way of conspiring with the audience in his Beltway depravity: A sly aside, a knowing roll of his eyes, a caustic pronouncement shared only with us.

Though many of the first-season batch of episodes are sparked with Underwood's in-our-face declarations, he keeps his own counsel until late in this second-season kickoff.

"There is but one rule," he reminds us in its final moments — "hunt or be hunted."

Happily for us, another 12 new episodes keep Underwood on the hunt as Netflix releases the full second season on its website Friday.

Set in Washington in the current day, House of Cards is a loose reinvention of the 1990s British political thriller of the same name.

It premiered a year ago and instantly established Netflix as a bold new contender in the world of original video, stealing thunder from such august cable networks as HBO and AMC while landing the first major Emmy nominations for a streaming video series.

In short, this Cards game was a game changer, forcing viewers (and the industry) to think outside the box: The box known as TV.

Now Underwood, formerly a ranking U.S. congressman, has plotted his way into the vice presidency. But there's no hint he's satisfied with that lofty perch, if the first four hours made available for preview are any indication. Even as he faces growing threats that could lead to his downfall, he's driven to climb higher, whatever it takes.

"That's the interesting thing about Francis: He has no allegiance, not even to a party," says Spacey with an admiring laugh.

Actually, Underwood does seem to have a precious pair of allegiances: To his own accumulation of power and to his wife, Claire, his loyal partner-in-crime, played by Robin Wright (who last month won a Golden Globe for her performance).

Last season, Underwood memorably stated that he loves his wife "more than a shark loves blood." As he navigates the political world, and taps into the underworld, his collusion with Claire is one of the series' most fascinating elements.

Interviewed last week, Spacey is natty in a blue pinstripe suit, open-collar shirt and swank olive green oxfords. At 54, he looks younger and more easygoing than Underwood, who, despite unflagging Southern charm and boundless energy, seems weathered by the pressures of his job and his insatiable ambition.

"There is so much I don't know about Francis, so much that I'm learning," says Spacey, clearly pleased to be granted even more time to explore him: Netflix recently announced plans for a third season.

"I've always thought that the profession closest to that of an actor is being a detective," he goes on. "We are given clues by writers, sometimes clues they're aware of and sometimes not. Then you lay them all out and try to make them come alive as a character who's complex and surprising, maybe even to yourself."

Since 2003, Spacy has focused on stage work as the artistic director of London's Old Vic Theatre, which has only reinforced for him a central tenet of his craft: "The primary function of an actor is to serve the writer, not ourselves," he says. "If you serve the writing, you will be in the right place."

"I absolutely know that without the work I've done at the Old Vic," says Spacey, "I wouldn't have been ready to do Francis Underwood."

Love Illuminated. Relationship lessons from Modern Love editor Daniel Jones

EMILY LAURENCE
Metro World News

Ever since the New York Times started its Modern Love column nearly 10 years ago, editor Daniel Jones has been inundated with love stories. From the unbelievably romantic to the flat-out unusual, he's pretty much seen it all.

Though he says he doesn't have all the answers to love's big questions, Jones has learned a thing or two about the subject, which he's sharing in his new book, Love Illuminated.

In honour of Valentine's Day, we called up Jones and got him to share some of the biggest love lessons he's learned after reading the roughly 50,000 love stories that have landed in his inbox.

If the idea of dating overwhelms you, get offline

"There's this belief that the more people you meet or go out with, the more chance you have of finding that one special person," Jones says.

"But from what I've seen, people have much better luck starting with a small group instead of searching for that perfect person within dozens and dozens."

Jones tells us that even with the popularity of online dating, people are still falling in love the same way they did in the past: by meeting potential dates through friends, work or hobbies.

If whenever you meet someone great you still have the sneaking suspicion that someone even better is out there, Jones again makes the case against online dating.

"Everything about online dating is encouraging you to seek perfection in someone. … Someone you fall for in real life may be the least likely person you'd choose if you saw him or her online," he says.

There's no substitute for physical chemistry

Step away from the computer

"Sharing your deepest emotions online just feels so close, but it's not."

Modern Love column editor Daniel Jones

Thousands of people have written to Jones about falling in love online before meeting in person. While not doubting the very strong emotional bonds made, he warns it doesn't always translate into physical chemistry, even when you expect it to.

"It's a controlled relationship that only exists in one narrow area. A real relationship involves the whole person."

Fragmented relationships can be fulfilling… but not forever

"In the dating world, it's easy to break yourself up into pieces and have sex with someone without caring about that person and then have a really deep connection with someone you don't have sex with," Jones says.

And it isn't always a bad thing; it just shows you aren't ready to be in a full relationship. "When you're in school, in your first job or your 20s, not everyone wants the responsibility of a full relationship," he explains. But if you do want the real thing, you have to give it your all.

Rolling Stone's Hoffman cover swap brings out the worst in 'disgusted' Drake

THE WORD
Dorothy Robinson
scene@metronews.ca

Drake has a little problem with Rolling Stone. The rapper has now sworn off magazine interviews after he claims Rolling Stone tossed his cover for the late Philip Seymour Hoffman for this month's issue — and misquoted him regarding his "mentor" Kanye West's Yeezus album.

"There were some real questionable bars on there. Like that Swaghili line? Come on, man. Even Fabolous wouldn't say some s— like that," he supposedly said, which the mag then printed. Drake took to Twitter to recant the line. "I never commented on Yeezus for my interview portion of Rolling Stone," he wrote. "They also took my cover from me last minute and ran the issue."

Regarding the "took my cover" mention — that's media speak for Drake being promised the cover in exchange for the interview.

He was apparently then bumped by the editors for Hoffman. "I'm disgusted with that. RIP to Phillip Seymour Hoffman. All respect due. But the press is evil," he wrote (it should be noted that all of Drake's tweets have since been deleted). "I'm done doing interviews for magazines. I just want to give my music to the people. That's the only way my message gets across accurately." That, or Twitter.

Afternoon delight not so delightful for Farrell on the wagon

Colin Farrell admits adjusting to a life of sobriety eight years ago was a bit daunting. "I was worried I wouldn't be able to talk, full stop," he tells Elle magazine. "I hadn't uttered a word sober in about 15 years." But that wasn't all he was worried about tackling without the help of a drink. "I made love to a woman about two and a half years after I got clean, and it was one of the most terrifying moments of my life," he says. "It was in the afternoon. The windows and the curtains were open. It was lovely and, to be crass, it wasn't f—ing. She was very gentle. But it was terrifying. Because I was just used to drunkenness and dark rooms and clubs and toilets and wherever."

Lil' Kim shows off lil' bump

Look out, world. Lil' Kim is going to be a mom. The notorious rapper debuted a growing baby bump at The Blonds' Fashion Week after-party in New York earlier this week, telling Us Weekly, "I'm so excited. I'm a few months along. I can't wait to be a mom!" Kim is keeping the father's identity under wraps for now, and she has no plans of slowing down. "I'm still going to work," she says. "I'm still going to be hardcore. The baby has made me even more of a beast."

Happy Valentine's Day!

After Christmas, Thanksgiving and Easter, today is the biggest wine buying day of the year. And it should be. Short of keys to a new car, there's no better way to show your love than from the inside of a glass.

It's a holiday to toot the horn of sparkling wines. Not only do they pair well with everything, they taste sublime all by their lonesome.

Pink versions really speak to Valentine's Day, with France's Louis Bouillot "Perle d'Aurore" Crémant de Bourgogne Rosé ($19.99 - $28.29) a non-vintage, Burgundy-based fizzy that takes its production and grape blend cues from the champagne region.

Its soft, red berry flavours and delicate, crushed raspberry aromatics are a burst of summertime that will warm the winter-ravaged heart of your special someone.

If you're having a love affair with the Olympics this month, crack a Molson Canadian Victory Bottle (625 ml, $4.20 - $4.95). It's a limited edition inspired by the three litre versions given to Canadian athletes during the 2010 games in Vancouver.

THE COUPLE THAT SAVES TOGETHER ...

STAYS TOGETHER: ING DIRECT HOSTS WEDDING CEREMONY AT ITS CAFÉ

CONTRIBUTED PHOTOS

Could we get married in a bank? This was what Michael Smith wondered when an email landed in his inbox about ING DIRECT'S For the Love of Saving contest.

"Imma and I talked about it," Smith says. "At first it was — how do we feel about getting married in a bank? Then we just decided to have fun with it and see what happens. We didn't expect to win."

But they did win ING DIRECT'S video contest, which awarded one couple $10,000 in a joint investment savings account and an all-expense paid wedding ceremony at the downtown Toronto ING DIRECT café — the two were married this past weekend in a simple, but emotional wedding ceremony.

The purple-and-grey themed winter wedding was held with some 60 guests watching as the couple, who have been engaged for nine months, exchanged their vows. And while friends and family were naturally excited about the big event itself, they were also in a bit of disbelief over the contest win.

"They were ecstatic," Smith says. "They were so excited and kept saying that they couldn't believe that we'd won."

And while the financially-conscious couple illustrated in their video the many ways they are savers (including watching videos at home for dates and taking the bus instead of the car), there were some serious plans behind the humorous video — not only did they get married this year, but they are also new homeowners, too, after buying a home in Ajax.

The theme of savings continued on to the wedding as well, starting with the bride's dress.

"I didn't order a dress or get something custom made," Imma Aliwalas says. "I just bought it two weeks ago, without an appointment even, because I didn't know I had to make one. The dress was simple and we saved money there, too, and I got the shoes at the bridal store for $25, as well. They were the shoes they told me to try on with the dress actually."

While some services were supplied for the wedding, including a cake from Pretty Sweet, invitations from Petal and Paper, an officiant via All Seasons, flowers from Pink Twig, and photography from Blush Photography + Film, other cost-cutting measures were taken. These included having two witnesses rather than a fully-stocked wedding party, choosing a less-expensive buffet dinner over a plated one, hosting a cash bar, and making just about everything else they needed for the event themselves.

"I can't remember the number of times we've been to Michael's with coupons we got online," says Smith, adding they made wedding accessories such as a poster of the couple for guests to sign, table numbers, centrepieces, programs and more.

"We did a lot of research because we didn't want it to look homemade, we wanted it to look nice so we took our time and budgeted. It was an investment of time — if you're not going to spend all that money, you're going to have to spend the time to do things."

And now the newlyweds are going to take time to enjoy life and save for another big event — a honeymoon.

"We're putting it off for a little bit," Smith says. "We want to see how we stand financially. And it's also peak travel season so we'd rather wait and save and not spend double the cost."

CONVERSATION ABOUT MONEY

Couples who save together (such as Michael Smith and Imma Aliwalas) stay together, according to a new ING DIRECT study.

The report found that 60 per cent of Canadians identify themselves as savers, and within this group, 58 per cent said they wouldn't consider marriage or a long-term relationship with someone who was a spender. That was why ING DIRECT was happy to award an all-expense paid wedding ceremony and $10,000 to savers such as Smith and Aliwalas.

"A wedding in a unique venue like our café isn't something you hear about every day," says Andrew Zimakas, chief marketing officer at ING DIRECT. "This was an opportunity to showcase our downtown Toronto location and demonstrate how we are helping to change the conversation about money."

Seek adventure in the great outdoors

KELLY PUTTER
For Metro

Chilly as the fresh air is this February, nothing beats gathering up the family for a bit of al fresco fun. So grab your coat and get your hat. Let the flurries and falling temperatures inspire you to seek joy and adventure in the great outdoors.

Play along with the world's six million other geocachers who engage in this outdoor game of hide and seek that is driven by GPS-enabled devices. A geocache is a small waterproof container that holds a logbook and small trinkets. Geocachers hide them in a wide variety of outdoor locations all over the world and participants use co-ordinates posted on the Internet to help them find the cache.

Visit a maple syrup farm. Experience nature's bounty along the trail of a sugar bush. Or take a horse-drawn ride among the maples. See how maple syrup is tapped. Dine on pancakes and syrup and capture that sense of good old-fashioned fun.

Build a snowman or snowwoman to spend time with your family and friends. GORILLAIMAGES/SHUTTERSTOCK

Skate on a natural outdoor ice rink. That's an experience everyone should have at least once in their lives. Live near a pond, canal or creek? Consider one of the best fresh-air exercises winter has to offer. Grab a puck and a hockey stick and turn your family fun into a game of shinny.

Try snowshoeing. Think of this as hiking in the snow. Hear the crunch as your family stomps over snow-covered ground decked out in oversized snowshoes attached to your soles. Poles offer added support. This is great exercise for anyone who can walk.

Let the Sochi Winter Olympics inspire you as you take the family snowboarding or skiing. Purchase medals from a dollar store to reward everything from best athlete and worst fall to most gracious non-complainer. The snow-covered slopes and hills await.

Build a snowwoman. Make hair out of branches or crown with a beret or tiara. Hang cherries for earrings. Shape curves at the waist and hips and don't forget the lipstick — big bright slices of orange.

Put your imagination to the test

If you are inclined to spend your Family Day indoors, put your imagination to the test and aim for high drama and memorable escapades.

Here are a few suggestions to get you started:

Introduce your little Monets to the world of art. Let them view sculptures, oil paintings and water colours up close and personal at your local art gallery. Even if you are in a small city or town, many municipal buildings such as libraries house art displays from area artists or students.

Lend a hand or two or three. Find out what a favourite local charity is doing and offer to pitch in. If that means painting a float for the Easter parade, collecting canned goods for the food bank or gathering together a care package for someone in need, volunteer your family's time and talents.

Get cooking. This is perfect for all ages. Make ice cream from snow. Learn how to roll sushi. Or bake cupcakes you can decorate. Being in the kitchen with your children is a great way to connect and learn about each other. And you get to nosh on goodies when you are done.

Plant a seed and watch it grow. Get your little ones excited about the prospect of eating food they have cultivated from the beginning. Start carrots, peas and eggplant indoors and watch your child's green thumb develop right alongside the veggies.

Canada fights off early jitters

Men's hockey. Canucks overcome slow start to dominate Norway

Several minutes after Norway took the ice for its pre-game warm-up on Thursday, pucks still hadn't arrived. Players skated or just stood around waiting.

It turned out to be a preview of the second period, when Team Canada found its groove after a slow start and simply dominated the Norwegians on its way to a 3-1 victory in its opening game of the Olympic men's hockey tournament.

It was a stark contrast from Canada's scoreless, sluggish first period, which players attributed to nerves more than any technical adjustments.

Preliminary round

Canada	Norway

Mentally, though, it was like a switch got flipped.

"You're playing your first game and everyone's probably thinking about where they need to be and systems — probably a thousand things going through their minds," captain Sidney Crosby said. "I think just once we settled in and realized how we play and how we need to play, we started to get some good results."

Canada, which got goals from Shea Weber and Jamie Benn during the second and one from Drew Doughty later to provide insurance, was tenuous at best and sloppy at worst early on. Being unsure of the big ice, of new teammates, of unfamiliar opponents, led to pucks hopping over sticks and players going offside at inopportune times.

Getting quality shots wasn't possible because the puck wasn't getting into prime scoring areas.

"I thought in the first period we didn't execute as well as we'd like," coach Mike Babcock said. "I thought we tried hard, didn't execute."

Babcock-coached teams are all about detail-oriented execution. When that was lacking, Norway was able to use tight, five-man units to frustrate the Canadians and keep them off the scoreboard.

Some of the credit has to go to Norway, but the proof of Canada's control over this game came almost immediately after the first intermission. Suddenly the puck was only in the offensive zone, and it looked like the NHL stars were toying with inferior competition. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Web traffic spikes during hockey game

There must've been a lot of Alt-Tabbing, panicked minimizing and cautious web surfing in offices across Canada on Thursday.

If you were surreptitiously streaming the men's hockey game between Canada and Norway while you should've been working you weren't the only one.

As much as 37 per cent of commercial and residential web traffic in Canada on Thursday afternoon was linked to streams of the highly anticipated hockey game, according to an analysis by the Waterloo, Ont.-based computer network company Sandvine. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Thrill of the chase inspires Chan

Figure skating.
Three-time world champ trails Japan's '100-point phenom'

As the most dominant skater on the planet for the past three years, Patrick Chan has been peering over his shoulder, skating with a target on his back that had grown increasingly heavy.

Canada's three-time world champion goes into Friday's long program at the Sochi Olympics in second place, looking at someone else's back for a change — and it's a position the Toronto skater doesn't mind at all.

"I like being in second, I like being in the chase. It's exciting," Chan said afterward — sounding more relaxed post-competition than he has in a while.

Yuzuru Hanyu — a 19-year-old Japanese phenom who lives and trains in Toronto — won the short program with a whopping world-record 101.45 points, making him the first man in history to break the 100-point barrier.

Patrick Chan gestures as he waits for his results after the men's short program competition in Sochi on Thursday. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The 23-year-old Chan, who's gunning for Canada's first-ever Olympic gold in men's singles, scored 97.52, landing a beautiful quadruple toe loop-triple toe loop combination to open the program. But he slightly over-rotated a triple Axel that was so big it got away from him.

Chan is well ahead of third-place Javier Fernandez of Spain (86.98), setting up virtually a two-man race Friday for gold.

It was a rough night for Canada's other two skaters. Kevin Reynolds of Coquitlam, B.C., was 17th in the short program after falling twice. Liam Firus of North Vancouver, B.C., was 28th and didn't qualify for the long program.

Chan's night, by comparison, wasn't nearly so dramatic. He felt relieved he didn't fall on his triple Axel, saying he could tell when he looked on the replay that he "had way more height than normal."

But Chan's performance was otherwise flawless.

David Beckham brings cheer to typhoon survivors

Relief effort. Soccer star 'humbled' upon being welcomed in Tacloban, Philippines

David Beckham visited the typhoon-devastated Philippine city of Tacloban on Thursday as part of UNICEF's relief efforts.

The central city is still struggling to deal with the impact of super Typhoon Haiyan which struck Nov. 8, killing more than 6,200 people and leaving tens of thousands still homeless.

The retired soccer star was welcomed by hundreds of survivors who have been living in United Nations-provided tents outside a stadium.

"I was humbled to visit Tacloban and see how people are still so full of spirit despite the devastation they have suffered. Close to six million children are affected and many have lost loved ones," a UNICEF statement quoted Beckham as saying.

Beckham exchanged high-fives and posed for pictures with children inside a large white tent used as a classroom. Some showed him their art work.

He removed his shoes on entering a tent where a family is living, stroking a sleeping infant's hands as he spoke with family members. Officials and UNICEF staff did not say what he and the family members talked about during his 30-minute stay.

It was Beckham's second trip to the Philippines as a UNICEF goodwill ambassador. He toured a shelter for former street children in Manila during his first visit in 2011 and played an exhibition game with the Philippine national soccer team. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NBA All-Star Weekend

"It's obviously something that nobody has done before and I was presented with the opportunity, and they're all events that I feel like I'm capable of competing in, so I figured, why not make history?"

Portland Trailblazers guard Damian Lillard in an interview with the Trail Blazers' website. Lillard will become the first player to compete in five events at NBA All-Star Weekend. A first-time All-Star selection, he'll also take part in the Rising Stars Challenge for rookies and second-year players, will defend his title in the Skills Challenge, and is entered in the dunk and three-point contests.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
Although today's full moon takes place in your fellow Fire sign of Aries you could still get emotional and say things you later regret, so bite your tongue and keep your feelings to yourself — for now.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You like to aim high but sometimes you wonder if it's worth the effort. Only you can decide but today is not a good time to make decisions concerning either your career or your family.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Today's full moon makes minor disputes seem bigger than they actually are, but now that you know that you can make a conscious effort not to take what you see and hear seriously.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
What looks confusing now will seem logical come the start of next week, so no matter what happens over the next two or three days, don't let it worry you. That applies especially to money matters.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Try not to jump to conclusions today because either your grasp of the facts is wrong or you are looking at them through an emotional haze.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
As today's full moon occurs in the most sensitive area of your chart, things you could not usually care less about will worry you. Provided you don't act on those worries everything will be fine.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
It may be annoying that someone is dragging their feet but don't make an issue of it. The full moon means you just have to accept that not everyone thinks or moves or acts as fast as you.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
It seems you're having second thoughts about a career move. You want to move up in the world, of course, but is this the route you should be taking? Think about it but don't make any decisions until next week.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
If you do things for others that they should be doing for themselves it won't be long before they expect you to do it all. Let others know that they need to take more responsibility for themselves.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
It seems you'd rather go on making mistakes than admit you're on the wrong track. Your fixity of purpose is often a great strength but not when you so obviously need to change direction.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Today's full moon can either be a positive or a negative influence, depending on how you choose to react to people who annoy you. No matter what they do or say, just smile.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
What you have been doing is good but the way you have been doing it is bad and today's full moon will in some way highlight that fact.
